COMMERCIAL BODIES PROTESTING AGAINST SHIPPING LEGISLATION.

At the meeting of the Chamber of Commerce yesterday, President Lane occupied the chair. Robert L. Kennedy, in behalf of the widow of John C.
Green, a late member of the Chamber, presented to it the sum of $50,000 with interest, amounting in all to $57,000, to be devoted to the relief of merchants, members of the Chamber, who have not been successful in business. A. A. Low's resolutions, asking for the appointment of a colamittee of trust, met with determined opposition from Mr.
Phillins, who wanted the subject referred to the Executive Committee. The resolutions were finally adonted, however. Mr. Low, as chairman of the Committee on Rocms, reported that they had been unsuccessful in their efforts to secure a place for meeting in the proposed new building on the old Post Office site at a reasonable rental, and he suggested that the members should subscribe $100,000 for the purchase of a site in one of the streets between Pine and Cedar. Quarters could thus be secured more cheaply and more satisfactorily than in the new building. Charles S. Smith proposed the mame of Sir Edward M. Archibald, K. C. M. G. C.
B., and ex-British Consul-General, for honorary membership. His name was greeted with great applause, and he was unanimously elected. Andrew
C. Armstrong, Thomas C. Pope and James Yearance were elected members. Resolutions were pussed condemning the Carey bill now before the Legislature, which provides that the Dock Commissioners shall have absolute control of all the wharves, piers and slips on the water-front of the city, and abolishes the o fices of captain of the port and harbormaster. The resolutions also recommended that Governor or Mayor should appoint the captain of the port, and that two of the harbormasters should be nominated by the Chamber, two by the Produce Exchange, and two by the Maritime Exchange, subiect to confirmation by the Chamber, two by the Produce

It was the sense of the committee that the Carey bill was wholly against the interests of the commerce of this port and that the laws should be awended to provide for a captain of the port at an annual salary of $2,500 a year, and six harbormasters at a salary of $2,000 each. THE COURTS.

MR. MURPHY'S SUIT AGAINST MR. ENGLISH.

William D. Murphy some time ago began an action in the Supreme Court against William H. English, the Democratic candidate for Vice-President in 1880, to recover about $1,303. The complaint alleges that Mr. English employed Mr. Murphy in 1880 to deliver a series of speeches in his behalf in Indiana. Mr. Murphy delivered twenty-five speeches, the value of which he places at $1,000. The speeches were delivered in different parts of Indiana, and Mr. Murphy spent about $300 for travelling expenses. Mr. English, not being chosen to preside over the Senate of the United States, refused to keep his contract with Mr. Murphy. His answer to the compaint alleges that Mr. English never promised to pay Mr. Murphy for the use of his eloquence. Mr. Murphy went to Indiana for his own pleasure and profit and spoke in public for his own entertainment. In the second place, Mr. Murphy's speeches were not worth anything. Finally, the alleged contract was against good morals and public policy and the Constitution and law of the land, and therefore void. To this last defence the plaintiff demurred. The demurrer was argued before Justice Larremore, who yesterday rendered a decision austaining the demurrer, on the ground that the contract was to be executed in Indiana, and that it did not appear from the pleadings that it was contrary to the law of that State.

JAMES TREGLOWN FOUND GUILTY.

The crowd that surrounded and filled the Court House at Morristown, N. J., vesterday, on the fourth day of the trial of James Treglown, was greater than on any previous day. Numerous constables, with long poles in their hands, worked hard to keep in order the turbulent mob that filled the passageways of the Court House and clamored for admission to the court-room. Treglown sat with pale face beside his counsel, and listened intently to every word that was said in the arguments to the jury. The proceedings of the day were opened by A. C. Smith, of Treglown's counsel, who reviewed the evidence in regard to the confession of the prisoner. The remark which Treglown made to Mrs. Wetheratge: "If I can't have Minule, I'll out an end to her and to myself, too," was, he said, the outcome of a fit of despondency and not the expression of a man bent on a murder. When Mr. Smith had finished, his associate, Mr. Werts, closed the argument for the defence. He reviewed the testimony on both sides, and assuming the truthfuliness of Treglown's story, made an eloquent appeal to the jury to acquit his elient.

Then Attorney-General Stockion delivered an address to the jury that was overwhelming. All the testimony was carefully analyzed and deductions were drawn from it unfavorable to the prisoner. One by one he demolished the theories of the defence and drew the lines closer and closer around the prisoner. His legal knowledge, impressive manner and powers of oratory seemed completely to carry the jury with him. Judge Magle, at the close of the Attorney-General's argument, delivered the charge to the jury. It was as unfavorable to the prisoner as the argument of Mr. Stockton had been. In reviewing the testimony had here, in previewing the testimony had here himself to save his life, he called on the jury to remember that "all that a man hath will he give for his life."

At ten minutes of 4 the jury retired. It was thought that they would be out for some time, and the crowd remember that "all that a man hath will be give for his life."

At ten minutes of 4 the jury retired. It was thought that they would be out for some time, and the crowd gradually dispersed until the court-room was left deserted. At 5:15 the jury intimated that they were ready to come in. The Judges took their seats and a dozen persons or so, who had heard of the agreement of the jury, came into the court-room. The jurors filed in and stood in a long line down the room. The prisoner was brought in and stood facing them. A deathly pallor overspread his face as he read his doom in their countenances and his eyes gleamed with an unnatural brightness. It was almost dark in the court-room, and through the gloom and the breathless music the Judge's voice sounded with great solemulty as he asked: "Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon a verdiet!"

"We have," was the answer.

"Who shall speak for you!"

"The foreman, how say you—guilty or not guilty!"

There was a panse, and then the foreman replied:

"Guilty of murrier in the first degree."

The prisoner was remanded for sentences

The object has happily been necomplished, and aithough for the present at British force remains in Erypt for the preservation of public tranquillity, her Majesty's Government are desirous of windrawing it as some as the state of the country and the organization of proper means for the maintenance of the Khedive's authority will admit of it. In the meanwhile, the position in which her Majesty's Government are placed toward his Highness imposes upon them the duty of giving advice with the object of securing that the order of taings to be established shall be of a satisfactory character and possess the elements of stability and progress. One result of recent occurrences has been to call special attention to the sace Canal, firstly, on account of the danger with which it was threatened during the first hiele slaces of the insurrection; secondly, in consequence of its occupation by the littles forces in the mane of the Khedive, and their use of it as a base of the operations carried on in his Highness's lebuif, and in support of his authority; and, thirdly, because of the attitude assumed by the direction and offeers of the canal company at a critical period of the campalan. As regards the first two of these points, her Majesty's Government staken by them for protecting the navigation and the use of the canal at all times, and its irredom from obstruction of damage by acts of war, are matters of importance to all nations.
